

Kingdom Moments

I had not shared with anyone that I had a nagging pain under my left foot, near the arch. The sharp nerve-like pain would come and go while walking and doing normal stuff for the last six months. Last Friday my foot even cramped up, was crazy disfigured-looking, and stuck in an uncomfortable position for maybe fifteen seconds. I thought about what kind of oil would help and I went ahead to put on some essential oils before bed.

On Saturday, the pain was more constant, and it peaked to a level eight as I walked. I have a high tolerance for pain and hardly complain, so I toughed it out.

While in praise and worship at church this past Sunday, I felt the urge to sing in tongues and it helped me to focus on Jesus. Without any distractions, I forgot about the discomfort. When Pastor Rob called out pain in the left foot, my hand went straight up! That is me!

I did not hesitate to go up for healing and as I stood in the Holy place, I felt incredible joy. I wanted to sprawl out on the carpet and swim around in this pool of healing, but I held back my excitement. (You are welcome.)

I always tell myself God knows my pain, my suffering, and fill in the blank. GOD KNOWS! The pain was gone, and my spirit lifted. I am grateful that He knew of my pain when I kept silent. His acknowledgment was my blessing. He cares for you too!

Thank you, Pastor Rob, for discerning and being sensitive to the ways the Lord wants to move and ultimately heal. I have had a few pangs of minor discomfort since Sunday, BUT God called it out into the light and I am blessed He knows, cares, and heals. Thank you, Abba!

The joy of the Lord is your strength. (Nehemiah 8:10 NIV)
